1. Commission Details

Commissioner: Cork City Council

Location: Douglas Village Shopping Centre

Budget: €6000

Source: Percent for Art for Douglas Library

2. Commission Description

Douglas Library is situated in the Douglas Village Shopping Centre. From January to August 2019 it had welcomed 84,843 visitors inside its doors, until the centre was destroyed by fire on August 31, 2019. This project involves the refurbishment and fitting out of the same space. It comprises of two large open plan areas with a selection of offices, storage and staff area to the rear. It is populated with fixed and mobile shelving storing approximately 35,000 items including books, DVDs and other AV materials.

The refurbished library will resume its very popular service to the Douglas community facilitating schools, young families and adults. The library will continue to host many activities, book clubs, writing groups and craft activities for all ages within the community. The Council's intention is that the library will proactively support learning, diversity and social and cultural inclusion, creatively embracing Douglas Library's past while ambitious for its future.

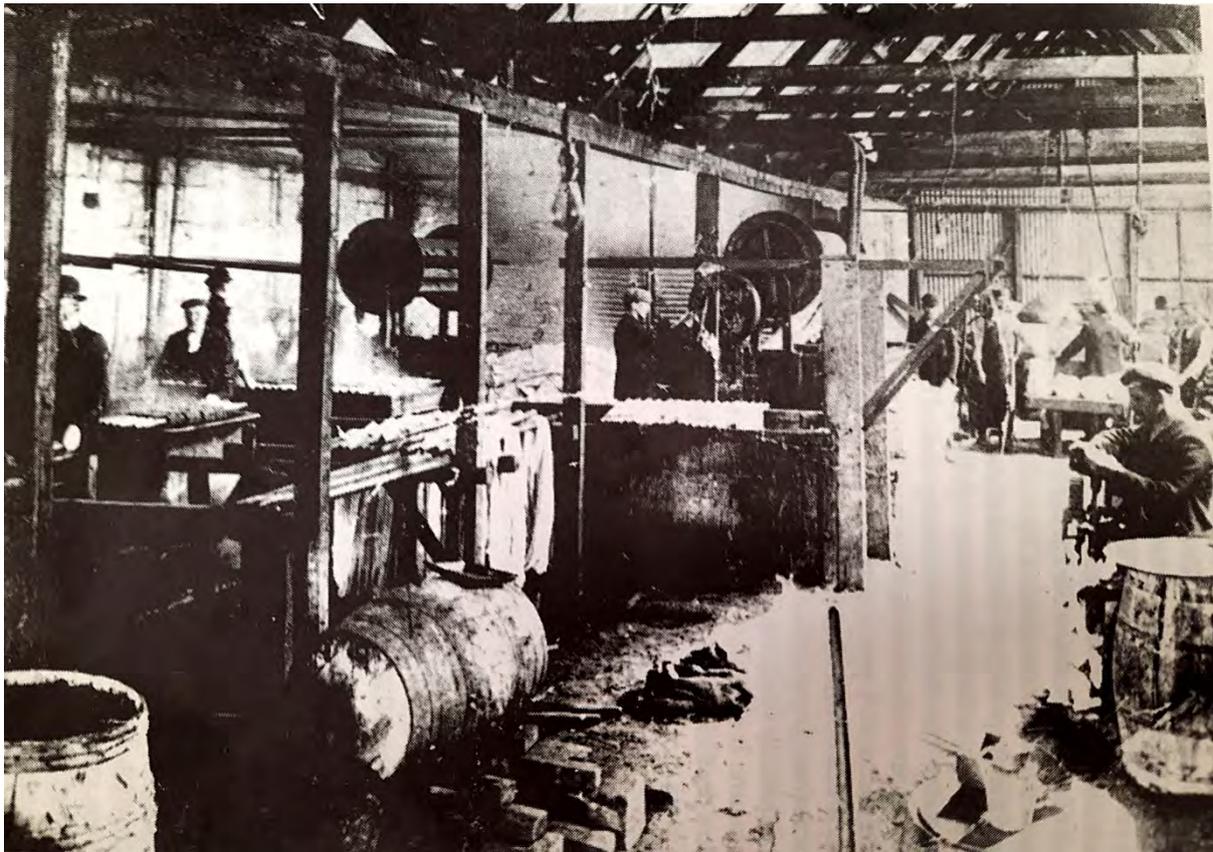

3. Commission Process

This commission process will be managed by Cork City Council Library Service supported by Cork City Arts Office. It is based on a two stage competition, whereby artists, makers, crafts people or other creative practitioners are invited to submit proposals. For the sake of simplicity, the term 'artists' will be used to describe the above throughout this document.

See overleaf for details on proposal requirements and submission criteria.

Shortlisted applicants may be called to interview by Cork City Council Library Service.

4. Brief

Artists are invited to submit project ideas for a project to mark the reconstruction and re-opening of the Library in Douglas Village.

The commissioners are particularly interested in submissions that reflect or respond to the legacy of the local industry and its workers, particularly in relation to textiles. Accounts reveal a rich material history that emerged through migratory influence to have an impact on local, national and international practice and trade. Today, it is a thriving part of our city and home to Cork Craft and Design.

See Historic Note for more information and context overleaf.

Historic Note on Douglas

Douglas developed as a suburban area in the eighteenth and early nineteenth centuries and was noted for a high concentration of 'big houses'. The popularity of the area among the nobility was such that high prices were commanded for surrounding land, and as a result, the acreage of their estates was lower than average.

The oldest house was believed to have been Ronayne's Court, built in 1627 by Morris Ronayne. The house was demolished in 1969 but the original inscribed fireplace was moved to Blackrock Castle.

The area began to develop as a wider urban settlement with the opening of the "Douglas factory" in 1726. In August 1755 this was reported to be the property of Messrs. Perry, Carleton and Co. with 100 looms operational. The mills produced sail-cloth and supplied sails to the Royal Navy, amongst other clients. The industry was established by Huguenot weavers and textile workers, such as the Besnards, who acquired the Mills by 1783. In 1801 they installed the first powered spindles in Ireland, along with skilled workers from Ulster and Scotland. In addition to the mill workers, employees included over 1,000 spinners working from their houses, and hacklers, bleachers and labourers tasked with preparing raw material in Douglas village.

Further textile mills opened in the nineteenth century, including an additional Besnard-owned scutching mill (Ravensdale, 1806), Lane's Corn and Hemp Mills (now Douglas Community Park, 1845), O'Brien's Brothers (St Patrick's Woollen Mills, 1882), Donnybrook Mills (Wallis & Pollock Flax Mills, 1866; later known as Morroghs' Woolen Mills, 1889/1890) and Conroy's Rope and Twine Mills (now Galway's Lane, 1892).

Most of the mills ceased operating in the early twentieth century, although St. Patrick's Woollen Mills and Donnybrook Mills continued until the 1970s. Some of the houses built for the mill workers are still in existence, including the terrace near the junction of the Grange Road and Donnybrook Hill.

Other large businesses of the time included an Osiery (willow cultivation for basket making) beside Conroy's Mills, two large brick manufacturers which straddled the nearby estuary, the Ravensdale Flour Mill, and the Woodville Flour Mill which produced sea biscuits and ship bread.

In 1898, the Cork Electric Tramways and Lighting Company built a route from Cork City to Douglas. This operated until 1932 when it was replaced by a bus service.

In the second half of the twentieth century, Douglas underwent major changes as it became a suburb of Cork. New housing was built and the area between Douglas and Cork City became built-up. Schools, shopping centres, cinemas and other amenities developed to serve the growing population.

Following the release of the MacKinnon Report in 2017, covering a possible extension of Cork city's boundary, it was proposed that the Douglas area (including Douglas, Frankfield, Grange and Donnybrook) would be moved to the administrative area of Cork City Council. This moved all of Douglas to the city, ending the divide of the town between the city and county.
